

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. I think the individual who pays for their phone bill should have rights as to who is permitted to call them. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has eliminated all of the solicitation calls that I had been receiving, averaging 3-5 calls per day. I can actually have dinner without being interrupted and go to bed before 9:00 p.m. and not have my phone ringing. I know what services and/or products that I want and where to find them. I do not need a company trying to persuade me to buy something, and in most cases using tactics that imply you wanted to purchase something when in fact you didn't and sending you that product. I also feels this provides protection to the elderly who feel pressured by these solicitation and those who are not competent enough to make sound purchasing decisions. Instead of protecting the commercial industry, the FCC should be protecting the consumers. Thank you.
